while strong and em are of course more semantically correct there seem definite legitimate reasons to use the b and i tags for customer written content in this snippet we re going to explain the differences between the b and strong i and em tags find out the differences and use them correctly

9 mrt 2010 indicate relative importance by nesting strong elements and use em for text with stress emphasis or b for text that is stylistically offset or bold without being more important

general consensus is that em and strong should be used as they indicate semantic meaning i e this text or word is more important than the others as well as how the text should look i e this word

14 jan 2026 tags like b strong i and em are often confused because they share visual defaults bold italic but their semantic roles are distinct let s unpack them

16 sep 2024 as a general rule it's best to use strong and em in your html they provide more information about your content's meaning and can improve accessibility and search engine optimisation

15 feb 2019 a good example of this is when trying to determine whether to use strong b em or i tags in your markup stylistically strong and b tags accomplish the same thing as do
